Introduction:

Due to the captain's drunkenness, the human crew's spacecraft gets lost in space and ends up in an area inhabited by an unknown alien race. Because of the spacecraft's core emitting a frequency that interferes with TV signals, the aliens cannot watch the final episode of their favorite TV series. To solve this problem, the aliens decide to invade the human spacecraft and extract energy from its core. However, since the aliens are a peaceful race, they don't carry weapons. On the other hand, the spacecraft's core is essential to the functioning of the ship, including powering the weapons inside, and without it, the human crew cannot survive.

Gameplay:

The player's goal is to protect the core of the spaceship from the attacks of the alien race. The main alien is protected by an energy field, and the player can only defeat them at the end of the game. Other attackers drain the energy of the core by hitting the doors of the core or hitting the player's energy sling. In addition to making the player's fight more difficult, attackers depleting the battery also reduces the power (speed) of their energy sling. The energy level of the energy core is indicated by a battery icon on the doors of the core, and during the game, the battery is replenished by one battery level once during the game. If the core energy is completely drained, the player dies and the game ends. After the player eliminates all the attackers using the energy sling, the main alien attacks, and the player must defeat them. If the player defeats the main alien, the game ends, but the player can continue playing to earn more points.

Controls:

The player controls one of the crew members who defends the core of the spaceship inside the ship. The player uses the left and right movement of the joystick on the controller, as well as the button press to shoot from the energy sling to defend the core from enemy alien attacks
